

What if you had the power to make anyone do anything you wanted?

Imagine if you could get anybody to believe, do or say anything you wanted them to, just by talking to them. What if – just thru the sound of your voice- you could cause people to believe you were completely invisible or that they found you irresistibly attractive? What if you knew the words that would command a room full of people to shake off their inhibitions and take a walk on whatever side you wanted? While this may sound like fantasy to you, it is the everyday world of Marc Savard.

Self-taught and starring on stage as the world's youngest professional hypnotist, Marc mastered the art of mesmerizing people at 19. By 21 he was appearing in over 200 stage shows internationally and had hypnotized over 20,000 people. At 23, he was fighting for his life.

Hit head on by a drunk driver and left with a broken back and fractured skull, Marc was forced to leave the stage and turn his hypnotism skills on himself. Marc not only defied his doctors grim prognosis by making a rapid and complete recovery, he left them in awe by controlling his pain with mind power instead of medication and controlling his vital signs during medical procedures. Within six months of his crash, Marc was back onstage performing with a passion for life that comes from being so close to death, and he was armed with new insights into the inner workings of the mind.

Think this might be too much power for one man to have? Don't worry. "From day one I vowed to only use my powers for good," says Savard. And he has. From creating an internationally acclaimed program for teaching high school students about the dangers of drinking and driving to helping world class athletes bring home gold medals from the 2002 Salt Lake City Olympics, Marc has put his extraordinary talent for manipulating the mind to good use.

In Marc's Live Hypnosis show, curious volunteers have the experience of their lives as they find themselves surrendering to the sound of Marc's voice; doing, seeing and saying the wildest, most out-of-control things, in the world's most chaotic show!
